EDITORIAL COMMENT

By Norman H. Parks

VALEDICTORY!

Now that the time has arrived to say it, I find yself overcome with emotion, and my heart truly d . . .

I am leaving Niles. I have sold the Township Register.

Years ago, a move of this kind would have buoyed me up to the heights of enthusiasm. A change of scene, a contemplated trip, a new business venture in the offing would have put me in tate of incomparable happiness. Now it crushes spirit, and to break the routine of my life me with apprehension.

seems that I have been in Niles for a life- To be exact, it lacks two months of being vears. The locality has grown to think of a permanent fixture in south Alameda v. Even to the native sons and native iters, I must have long since ceased to be a oet bagger."

have become extremely fond of the Township egister. I have been proud of it. In operating three papers until recently, at no time did I cease to consider the Township Register the one dearest to my heart.

The people here have been good to me. Of strong convictions, and of a willingness to always express them, I know that I have run at cross-purposes with nearly everyone of my readers, at times. Yet they have magnanimously accepted in the right spirit everything I have had to offer editorially, feeling, I am sure, that the good points outweighed the opinions I expressed at variance with their own.

As I have understood my duty, I have given unstintingly to Niles, and the other towns and localities within the sphere of the Register's circulation and influence. That I have not been able to do more than I have done, has been a source of great regret to me. But I have tried. For the few things that the Register has accomplished, I am grateful to the people who have cooperated in its policy to make success possible.

In these eight years I have grown to know practically every person in Washington township. I like their friendliness. It is good to be able to say "hello!" to most every one you meet. It is a homey feeling.

Some I know hate me. They have taken my fight for better government and more equitable justice as personal. No fight that I have waged in the years I have lived here has been personal, nor inspired by selfish reasons. I leave Niles with malice toward no man.

Why am I leaving? A natural question. I hope to get into a bigger field. I want to be able to reach more readers—talk to more people—have more people working with me. The money part of a larger paper does not interest me except in so far as it may make progress possible and put me in a position to tell any dirty politician to go to hell, and make him like it.

I cover my typewriter, much as a mourner draws a shroud over a departed friend. A tear drops upon its cover. It has recorded my thoughts, later to be set in type for the readers' consideration. Now all is still. The click of its keys are silenced. Through it I will speak no more.

Words fail me, in this final paragraph, words to express my true emotions as the Township Register passes into other hands, and the hour is here to say goodbye to its hundreds of readers whose confidence I have tried so hard never to violate. I have felt a personal interest in every subscriber of the Register. Its list has been like a great, happy family, whose interests have been my interests; and the paper's campaign to correct political abuses, has been their campaign of righteousness. We have worked together. There has been a strange intimacy between us, though most of us have never met. I have felt it, you have felt it. Long after I have gone, I shall remember the years I spent with you. They have been happy years.

To every single reader, from the bottom of my heart, I say I leave you with regret. Goodbye, and though our paths may part, let memory linger on.

JOHN ROSE SURRENDERS TO OFFICERS IN NILES

Alleged Forger Returns Monday From Nevada Hideout

John Rose, wanted in Niles on a forgery charge since January 6, surrendered to officers at Niles Justice court Monday afternoon. He was taken to the Alameda county jail by Deputy Sheriffs James Landon and W. O. Ebright that same afternoon.

Caesar Fernandez, Rose's accomplice, was captured in Reno, Nevada, Tuesday, and the police there notified the Alameda county sheriff's office. Deputy Sheriff James Landon was sent to Nevada to bring Fernandez back to Niles.

Rose and Fernandez will probably be arraigned before Judge J. A. Silva tomorrow, Friday. Bail has already been set at $2000 cash or $4000 bonds. Conviction for forgery, which is a felony, carries a sentence of from one to fourteen years in the state penitentiary.

Fernandez is believed to have been the one who wrote the checks on the Niles Branch of the Bank of Alameda County, made payable to John Rose, and signed with the name of Wm. J. Pine. About $150 was obtained from Niles merchants in this way. R. Cozzi, of Niles, swore to the charges against the accused men.

Upon his surrender, Rose was said to have stated that he and Fernandez had been hiding in Nevada. After their escape January 6, it was believed by many that they had fled to Hawaii, for Rose had declared his intention and desire to visit the islands many times.

A melancholy circumstnce in connection with Awbrey's death was that he had just become a father on the day of his death. JANUARY RAINS ADEQUATE SAYS W. D. PATTERSON

Water Table High But More Precipitation Necessary

Rainfall during January has been adequate and with water flowing in Alameda creek at present, there is little danger of too low a water table in Washington township gravel beds this season if precipitation continues, says William Patterson, who is in charge of the Alameda County Water district.

Patterson declares the level of water in the gravel beds is now sufficiently high but it will take continued rainfall to keep the creek flowing.

If a shortage of rain develops, he says, there is little liklihood that the San Francisco water department will not release sufficient flow from Calaveras dam to tide the district through the season.

The exact amount of release has not yet been determined and will not be until more definite information on conditions is available.

TOMATO GROWERS IN UNANIMOUS VOTE FOR RATE OF $15 PER TON

Other Counties Join In Move To Hold Up Prices

Two hundred tomato growers representing 2700 acres of tomatoes met Tuesday evening at the call of the Washington Eden Farm Center and unaminously voted to continue their stand for a $15 price and the Farm bureau tomato contract.

Letters and telegrams from different sections of the state including Sacramento county, Contra Costa county, and Southern California and the State Farm Bureau Federation were read. These communications showed that the great majority of growers everywhere were holding out for the same price and contract as the local growers.

Local committee men who had canvassed their neighbors reported that practically all the men whom they had seen had not yet signed, and were holding out for the price asked.

B. H. Shepley, of the Farm Bureau Federation, spoke of the extensive Canning Tomato Growextensive Canning Tomato Growers' association formed nia counties, and of the great interest which he found in the northern counties in the program for securing better prices for tomatoes.

Tomato farming was traced from the beginning in Ventura county under the leadership of Thomas A. Robertson. He told of the success in the south, both in securing better prices for canning tomatoes in the past years and for market tomatoes through the market tomato pro rate which operated in the Los Angeles area during 1934.

JAPANESE MAKE PLEDGE

Harry Conda, of Irvington, spoke for the Japanese growers. He stated that this group of growers could be depended upon to hold out for the $15 price as long as the Farm Bureau was doing the same.

A number of the larger land owners in the township were present and voiced their intentions to co-operate with their tenants in this move. Some of the grow-

W. H. FORD PRESENTS GOLD KEY FOR HIGHEST PUBLIC SERVICE DURING YEAR 1935

One hundred and twenty-five persons representing nearly every civic organization in Alameda county gathered Monday night at Veterans' Memorial hall to do honor to the Niles Junior Chamber of Commerce at its first annual banquet. High point of the evening came when Sam Kerns, president of the group, received a golden key for his outstanding public service in the community during 1935. W. H. Ford, building supply executive who resides in Niles, presented the award and made the principal address of the evening.

GROUP BALANCES BUDGET.

Kerns, as president of the Junior Chamber, opened the program with his report of the organization's activities for the past year. He told his hearers that his organization had handled nearly $4000 during 1935, had successfully completed numerous civic projects, and had wound up the year with $300 on the credit side of the ledger.

Mr. Ford, in commenting on the accomplishment, declared that the young men were better budgeteers than the national administration.

OUTLINES 1936 PLANS.

Building of the gigantic sign on the hills above Niles, establishment of an efficient night watchman service and street cleaning department and entertainment of 500 Niles children at a big Christmas party were achievements of the group in 1935, Kerns said.

As projects for 1936 he mentioned reorganization of the local Boy Scout troop, establishment of a junior traffic patrol, naming of city streets and a school bus service for children.

Russ Knowland of Oakland, past vice president of the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce acted as installing officer at a simple service.

VISITORS INTRODUCED.

Members assuming office were Kerns, who was re-elected; Joe Vivieros, vice president; Louis Di Giulio, treasurer, and Barney Briocchi, Guido Tuana, Lawrence Pine, Norman Rose and Howard Denton, directors.

Visitors introduced during the meeting were Jack Reith, secretary of the Alameda Junior Chamber of Commerce; Bill Reichel, past president of the Oakland group; J. J. Amarel of Pleasanton, president of the Alameda county Junior Chamber, Judge J. A. Silva; Supervisor Ralph V. Richmond, and Andy Jergenson, past president of the Pleasanton Junior Chamber.

O. E. WALPERT HONORED.

TOWNSHIP PATRON SKETCHES VIEW OF RUSSIAN METHODS

W. H. Ford, prominent resident of Washington township, gave his hearers a shrewd analysis of the significance and effectiveness of the Russian experiment Monday night at the Junior Chamber of Commerce banquet.

He also gave his audience a wealth of interesting detail regarding his visit to the Scandinavian countries which preceded the trip to Leningrad and Moscow.

Frankly admitting his visit was brief, the speaker described the life of the people in those cities as he saw it.

RUSSIANS ENSLAVED.

Slavery, as stringent as that under the Czars exists in Russia today, declared Mr. Ford. He pointed out that, with the communist goverment in control of all property, the Russian citizen has no chance to exercise any of the personal liberties to be found in other portions of the world.

"The government tells each worker how much he must produce to remain in good standing," Mr. Ford declared. "Good producers receive red cards which enable them to purchase food and supplies up to the limits of their wages. Those who do not produce quite so much get yellow cards which sharply limit their right to buy."

THE DOCTORS ARE RIGHT

Women should take only liquid laxatives

Many believe any laxative they might take only makes constipation worse. And that isn't true.

Do what doctors do to relieve this condition. They use a liquid

A cleansing dose today; a smaller quantity tomorrow; less each time, until bowels need no help at all.

laxative, and keep reducing the dose until the bowels need no help at all.

Reduced dosage is the secret of aiding Nature in restoring regularity. You must use a little less laxative each time, and that's why your laxative should be in liquid form. A liquid dose can be regulated to the drop.

The liquid laxative generally used is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It contains senna and cascara — both natural laxatives that form no habit even with children. Syrup Pepsin is the nicest tasting, nicest acting laxative you ever tried.

WM. H. FORD WILL DONATE $1,500 FOR BOY SCOUT CAUSE

With the opening of the campaign in Southern Alameda county to raise the sum of $5,500 to further the Boy Scout cause, William H. Ford has stated his intention of donating $1,500 if the remainder can be raised in the campaigning now under way here.

BUDGETS COMBINED

For the first time Southern Alameda county has combined the budget, and $2500 is to be used to employ a field executive in this territory.

Aid is being given in this undertaking by Glenn S. Overman, representative of the twelfth regional office of the Boy Scouts at Los Angeles. Overman was released from his duties in the southern part of the state, so that he could lend his invaluable assistance in the local drive.

In speaking of Boy Scout work Overman made the following statement:

"Scouting embraces youth welfare in the country as a whole and should not be looked upon as as matter of local troops to be supported by the parents of the boys enrolled."

Overman will be here some time this month, and it is hoped that at least 60 per cent of the budget will be secured at the end of that period.

PROMINENT CITIZENS GIVE

Beginning February 1, local committees will take over and attempt to raise the remaining 40 per cent. According to Allen G. Norris, chairman of Washington Township district, the usual campaign plan will be followed.

Other prominent citizens who have contributed to the Scout fund are Thomas Norris, of Livermore, who gave $250 and L. K. Peterson, of Hayward, $100.

CHICKEN FARM IS ESTABLISHED BY WALTENBERGER

A new poultry business is being started by Fritz Waltenberger, who plans, as soon as buildings are ready, to house 3000 chickens.

Some of the brooder houses, and chicken houses are already completed, and construction on additions is progressing rapidly. At the present time Waltenberger has 2000 chicks, which came from the Kimber Poultry Farm.

Only the latest equipment is being installed, which includes brooders electrically heated and controlled by thermostats, and automatic watering devices.

Building is being done according to plans issued by the University of California. Brooder houses are 90x18 feet, and henhouses are 30x40 feet. Each house has runways which are concrete floored.

Waltenberger is a member of the Hayward Poultry Producers association and will raise stock for that organization.

The Man Who Knows

Whether the Remedy You are taking for Headaches, Neuralgia or Rheumatism Pains is SAFE is Your Doctor. Ask Him

Don't Entrust Your Own or Your Family's Well-Being to Unknown Preparations

BEFORE you take any preparation you don't know all about, for the relief of headaches; or the pains of rheumatism, neuritis or neuralgia, ask your doctor what he thinks about it — in comparison with Genuine Bayer Aspirin.

We say this because, before the discovery of Bayer Aspirin, most so-called "pain" remedies were advised against by physicians as being bad for the stomach; or, often, for the heart. And the discovery of Bayer Aspirin largely changed medical practice.

Countless thousands of people who have taken Bayer Aspirin year in and out without ill effect, have proved that the medical findings about its safety were correct.

Remember this: Genuine Bayer Aspirin is rated among the fastest methods yet discovered for the relief of headaches and all common pains . . . and safe for the average person to take regularly.

You can get real Bayer Aspirin at any drug store — simply by never asking for it by the name "aspirin" alone, but always saying BAYER ASPIRIN when you buy.

INTRODUCING NEW PUBLISHERS OF NILES' TOWNSHIP REGISTER

The writer wishes to introduce to the people of southern Alameda county, Carl S. Kelty and Henry Alderman, who have purchased the Township Register. The present issue is being gotten out under their management.

Mr. Kelty is a newspaper man of thirty years' experience. He has owned a number of very good publications, has both country and metropolitan experience, and for a number of years has been assistant financial editor of the Los Angeles Herald. He left that position last Saturday night with the best wishes of every man and woman on that great metropolitan afternoon daily. Rich in experience and ripe in years, he will bring to the Register many progressive ideas, and steady its course with sane and mature judgment.

Mr. Alderman, nephew of Mr. Kelty, is a young man of fine character and winning personality. He has the enthusiasm of youth—the will and determination to succeed. Alderman, like Kelty, has had both small town and city experience. For eight years he has worked on the Yakima, (Washington) Republic, afternoon paper, running from twelve to twenty-four pages. Though still in his twenties, Alderman has held down the city desk for some time. He has ability and a lot of energy. The world is before him. It is our prediction he will go far.

The younger man is bringing his mother with him, who is a sister of Mr. Kelty. These fine people will be a real addition to the township's business and social circles. Come into the office and meet them. Give them the welcome they deserve. Phone in your news items. Make it as easy as you can for the newcomers during the first few trying weeks, when everything is strange to them. And don't forget to make the new publishers happy with generous job printing orders and advertising.

Without any reservations whatsoever, we unhesitatingly say Niles and Washington township are extremely lucky in having the Register fall into such competent hands. The paper, under the new management, will be a credit to the community. Get behind it with your business.

It is yours, Messrs. Kelty and Alderman. Goodluck.

NORMAN H. PARKS.

MRS. THANE THANKS CONTRIBUTORS WHO AID HISTORY WORK

Mrs. J. E. Thane, chairman of the committee of the Country club which is preparing material for the forthcoming history of Washington township, has requested the Township Register to thank the many friends who have contributed letters in response to the committee's request for accurate data respecting historical happenings, personages and developments in the township.

A wealth of material has already been contributed from myriad sources, and Mrs. Thane remarked, it is manifestly impracticable to thank each contributor personally. More material is needed, and it is the purpose of the Country club to make the history most comprehensive and a noteworthy addition to the literature of California.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—The little town of Heron River is eagerly awaiting the arrival of Anna ("Silver") Grenoble, daughter of "Gentleman Jim," formerly of the community, but known as a gambler, news of whose recent murder in Chicago has reached the town. Sophronia Willard, Jim Grenoble's sister, with whom the girl is to live, is at the railroad depot to meet her. Sophronia's household consists of her husband, and stepsons, Roderick and Jason. On Silver's arrival Duke Melbank, a shiftless youth, makes himself obnoxious. Sophronia slaps him.

CHAPTER II.—Roderick is on the eve of marriage to Corinne Meader, daughter of a failed banker. The Willards own only half of the farm on which they live, the other half being Anna Grenoble's.

CHAPTER III.—Silver, to Sophronia's delight, declares her eagerness to live with her aunt. She also says she has no intention of selling her half of the farm, which the Willards had feared she might do. She meets Roddy, by chance, that night.

CHAPTER IV.—Silver tells Sophronia ("Phronie, by request) something—but by no means all—of her relations with Gerald Lucas, gambler friend of her father. Roddy marries Corinne, and brings her home.

...ma's face fell in disappointment. Silver had helped her make the fancy molds of fruit gelatine that had reposed all day in the cooler. She knew, too, how long Phronie had labored over the deviled eggs and the special mayonnaise dressing, not to mention the angel cake with its greeting in pink icing on the top.

"Maybe you'll feel more like having a bite after you've washed?" Phronie suggested hopefully.

Corinne shook her head mournfully. "I'm so sorry, Mrs. Willard. It has been so hot driving today. Oh—Roddy!' Paula went upstairs with our bags, didn't she? Perhaps she would like something to eat. Do you mind calling her?" Then in a hasty aside she added, "We picked her up only this afternoon in an employment office in Maynard, but I suspect she's a jewel."

Paula entered the living room, and while Corinne, playfully democratic, introduced her to Silver and Jason, Silver found her interest quickened by the German girl's appearance. She was Junoesque in build, with vast thighs and breasts and shoulders. Her legs and arms were almost breath-taking when she walked. Silver thought she had never seen anything more beautiful than her corn-silk hair, which was plaited in a coronet across her head. Her face was round, rosy and placid, but far from vacant.

But it was Jason's eyes, fastened on Paula, that really startled Silver. Corinne, however, was taking no note of his reactions. She was glancing about at the walls of the living room in an appraising way.

"Funny," she said with a deprecating little laugh, "I feel as though I am in a different house from the one I remember. I love these etchings, Roddy dear!"

Sophronia vanished suddenly into the dining room.

"I thought they were good," Roddy told Corinne modestly. "But if Jason wasn't so bashful about hanging his work—"

"There's a tankful of hot water," Corinne," Jason broke in. "We thought you might want a bath."

Corinne blinked at him in a bewildered way, and Silver had the distinct feeling that she was not really looking at him.

* * * * * * * *

When they were alone together in their room, Corinne, halfway through the hundred brush strokes she was giving her hair, looked at Roddy with shrinking eyes.

"Do you mean," she asked breathlessly, "that Jason is going to stay—with us?"

A painful flush mounted to Roddy's temples.

"Why, of course, darling," he stammered. "Lord—you don't mean—you don't dislike him, do you?"

Her small hands gathered over the brush on her knees.

"No," she said softly. "No—of course not."

Roddy got up impulsively, knelt beside her and drew her toward him.

"Corrie!" he pleaded. "I can see how you feel about him. But I tell you, darling, he's the finest soul in the world. And he's an artist, Corrie. He really is. You ought to see his work. If we only had enough money, I'd send him out to study. He has his studio all fixed up in the attic. It would be impossible for me to suggest that he should move. My G—d, Corrie—I couldn't! Please, sweetheart, try to like him!"

A trembling little smile passed over her lips. Closing her eyes, she leaned her head back against Roddy's shoulder.

"I'm sorry, Roddy," she murmured. "Of course, I'll like him."

In anguish, Roddy kissed her. Then he kissed her again, and she drew a lock of her scented hair across his lowered eyes.

CHAPTER V

OLD Roderick pointed with his pipe up at the big house, where young Roddy lived with his wife Corinne.

"You know," he said whimsically, "maybe I'm gettin' on, but I swear that house ain't sitting right on the ground. It's up in the air a little more every night I look at it—and farther east, too."

Silver laughed with Jason and Steve.

"It ain't likely to go much higher with that big hired girl they have in it," Steve, the hired man, observed drily.

Jason cleared his throat. "Oh, I don't know that she's so big," he said. "She has better ankles and feet than most girls in Heron River."

Phronie opened the door and called out to them. "I wish one of you youngsters would run up and borrow some cinnamon for me. I've started to make cookies—"

"Can't you ever rest, Ma?" Jason said, getting to his feet.

"I'll go, Jase," Silver said quickly. "You stay here and play."

While she went lightly up the slope she thought again, as she had countless times during the past week, of Corinne's baffling attitude toward Roddy's brother. She appeared to be cordiality itself toward him; was, in fact, almost glib with sincere solicitude. Perhaps that was the trouble, Silver reflected. For through it all, Silver had had the distinct feeling that Corinne was deliberately shutting poor Jason out of her consciousness. She feared, too, that Jason sensed this, and often wondered how long his pride or perverse humor would sustain him under the same roof with his brother's wife.

Then there was Paula. But Jason was different and Paula too shy for the development, as yet, of any friendship between them which might be embarrassing to Corinne. Only yesterday, however, Corinne had called Paula sharply away from the yard where she was watching Jason repair a corn-crib, and had set her to some trivial and unnecessary task.

When Silver entered Roddy's house, she found Corinne writing letters in the living room. Roddy, at the dining room table, was at work over his ledger.

"Phronie wants to borrow some cinnamon, Corinne," Silver explained when Roddy's wife inquiringly turned her head, "I can find it myself in the kitchen."

"Oh," Corinne said inattentively, "Paula will be down in a minute. She's upstairs—tidying her hair, I suppose. She'll find the cinnamon for you. I'm sure I don't know where she keeps it. Sit down, Silver. I must get these letters finished."

Silver picked up a copy of Vanity Fair and seated herself in the dining room. Roddy gave her an odd, vaguely troubled look, then dropped his eyes again to his ledger.

But immediately there was the sound of a car entering the driveway, and Corinne went to answer the doorbell.

"I'd better go home," Silver said quickly to Roddy.

A gleam of anger lit Roddy's eyes. "You stay where you are," he commanded. "Didn't you tell me people round here had to get used to you?"

Silver had no time to make a reply.

A tall, granite-faced woman with a mottled red nose and a hat that bore a stiff little feather, entered the living room. In her wake, not unlike the trailing ruffle of a great ship, came a simpering miss of seventeen or eighteen, much befrilled, and wearing a flowered leghorn hat.

It was Mrs. Leander Folds, the school superintendent's wife of Heron River, and her daughter, Ethelwyn.

"My dear," Mrs. Folds was saying loquaciously, "I suppose I should have telephoned. But I am a woman of impulse, you know! We just got back yesterday from our holiday in the Black Hills, and heard about Roddy's marriage. We were out driving, and I thought this would be a good time to catch you in. We must—we just must have you in our reading club. Ethelwyn here is secretary of it, and it's so instructive for the young people—"

Mrs. Folds had advanced farther into the room, and now her eye fell upon Silver. A curious, tight look appeared on her face as though she were holding her breath. Silver stood up.

"Have you met Silver Grenoble, Mrs. Folds?' Corinne asked hastily. "My husband's cousin."

"How do you do?" Silver said, but made no move toward the two visitors.

"Oh—" Mrs. Folds surveyed her thoroughly. "How do you do? Roddy's cousin by—by marriage? Of course. Yes, yes. And how do you do, Roddy? Oh, dear. I just thought of something." She turned abruptly and patted Ethelwyn's arm. "Run and see if I brought that book I wanted Mrs. Willard to read. It ought to be in the car. If it isn't, wait for me there, my dear."

Ethelwyn vanished docilely, although her eyes a moment before had been frankly devouring Silver. Silver could feel the hot blood pounding in her throat, her temples. Mrs. Folds' strategy had been so brutally obvious. Yet she was powerless to move.

"Now," said Mrs. Folds, "I can't stay a minute—but you must promise to come to our meeting on Tuesday, Mrs. Willard. We are studying Hardy at the moment—with one of the moderns thrown in, just for relief, so to speak." She smiled apologetically.

Roddy gave a sardonic bark of a laugh. "Hardy? You don't consider him a modern, eh?"

Mrs. Folds looked bewildered. Corinne agitatedly stepped closer to her and said, "Thank you so much, Mrs. Folds. I shall be glad to come, indeed."

"By the way, Mrs. Folds," Roddy said coldly, his face curiously white beneath his tan, his eyes two grayly burning slits, "has this club of yours a limited membership?"

Mrs. Folds reddened unbecomingly. "Er—yes, it has," she plunged. "You see—our house is small—"

Silver stood with her hands clenched about the table's edge, back of her.

"That's fortunate," Roddy interrupted Mrs. Folds, and laughed aloud. With that he slammed shut the covers of the ledger, flung it with a sharp report down upon the table and strode through the dining room into the kitchen.

Mrs. Folds smiled feebly and extended two fingers to Corinne. As though across waves of heat, Silver saw Mrs. Folds sail out of the house, Corinne accompanying her.

Paula had come down the back stairs. She entered the dining room now and handed Silver the can of cinnamon. Silver was suddenly aware of Roddy standing before her with crossed arms.

"You'll find this place isn't worth the trouble, kid," he said somberly. "The women will knife you—every chance they get."

She gave him a steady look. "Mrs. Folds can't hurt me—really," she said with a proud lift of her head.

Roddy's lips moved in a hard way. "That isn't all of it," he continued. "I meant to tell you when you first came in, but I didn't get a chance. That man Gerald Lucas was enquiring about you today in Heron River."

For a moment Silver leaned heavily against the table. Her eyes were fixed wide upon Roddy's face, as though she expected to hear him repeat his words.

Corinne came bithely in through the front of the house.

"What an ogre of a woman!" she cried, laughing. "I'm glad you snubbed her, Roddy. I couldn't very well, because I thought she meant to invite—"

"Phronie is waiting for the cinnamon, Corinne," Silver said dully. "I must go."

But it was Jason who took the spice into the house to Sophronia. Silver felt that she could not, right now, bear the interior of the stone house, even for a moment.

"I'm going for a walk," she told Jason.

"A walk?" he asked, and frowned.

But Silver broke away and started for the road. She thrust her hands into the pockets of her sweater and walked blindly into the last sinking glow of the sunset.

Presently a long, graceful roadster turned the corner and came toward her. As it slowed down and stopped beside her, the man at the wheel laughed with pleased surprise and leaned over the door. Silver glanced up at him.

The man was Gerald Lucas.

For an instant, as Gerald climbed down from his car and stepped toward her, Silver contemplated flight. Instead, when the impulse had passed, she thrust her hands into her pockets and looked coolly up at him.

Gerald seized her hands. "Silver—what's the matter with you?" he demanded. "Get in and we'll take a drive and talk things over."

"No," Silver said firmly, "I don't want to go driving—and I have nothing to talk over, Gerald."

He put his hand lightly on her arm and drew her toward the car. "Listen to me, Silver," he urged. "What's got into you? I didn't come out here to kidnap you, though I'd like to. You've grown even more luscious—if that's possible. Sit in the car and let's talk."

For a moment she hesitated, then with a shrug she got into the car. She surveyed him with detachment, and wondered what had happened to her since she had last seen him. He was as rakishly good-looking as ever, his eyes as full of confidence and meaningful laughter as ever. But it was as though she looked at him now through an obscuring film.

Gerald looked critically down at her. "You should have known better than to try running away from me, sweetheart. You didn't even give me a chance to tell you how sorry I was—about your father."

"I'm trying to forget that," Silver said briefly. "How did you find out where I had gone?"

He pinched her chin lightly and smiled. "Little Gerald finds out just about everything he wants to know. Old Ben Hubbard is a friend of mine. So I came out here and snooped before I looked you up. And lo and behold! I've got the very thing I've wanted for some time. A resort on Emerald bay, my love! You see, I had a few grand salted away—"

"You had to get out of Chicago, didn't you, Gerald?" Silver asked, and looked at him levelly.

"Well, now, my dear," he protested, "do we have to go into that? I'll admit—things were getting warmish. But this—or these—are the wide open spaces. And here I am with a peach of a lay-out up on that lake. It's right on the highway so I can keep it open for the winter trade. All I need now is a kiss from you, Silver."

She drew back deliberately. "No."

He looked at her narrowly, then leaned toward her with a darkened face. "I don't quite follow you, Silver. I thought it was all fixed between us. I've been on the level with you, haven't I? We've been everything to each other, haven't we? Now, what's it all about? I thought you ran away because of your father's death. I couldn't believe it was because of me, Silver. Honestly, I thought you expected me to follow you. Well—I think you ought to do some of the talking."

She had been staring vacantly past him at the darkening west. Some of the old fire was stirring within her at the sound of his voice and the nearness of him. But it was, she told herself with the deeper part of her consciousness, only the quick and vanishing fire of a will-o-the-wisp. In some way she had changed. She was no longer swayed completely by Gerald Lucas.

"Yes, I ought to talk, Gerald. I know that," she said. "But I don't know how to tell you." She brought her eyes even with his own. "It's just that—I've got over all the—" She hesitated.

"Are you trying to tell me that you don't love me any more?" he prompted.

"Oh, Gerald!" she cried in desperation. "Do you believe I ever loved you? Could you call that love—in that feverish atmosphere? You—you appealed to me in a certain way, that's all. I know that now, Gerald. And I don't want to go back to what I left behind me. I don't want that kind of life—yours and—and Dad's."

He looked at her hard, and she saw an almost wistful disappointment enter his eyes.

"Well—of course—that lets me out," he said slowly. "But you happen to be the only girl I've ever wanted to marry, Silver. And I'm thirty-two now." He was thoughtful for a moment. "Are you sure you won't want to go back after you have had a taste of this life? I can't see Silver Grenoble living in a place like this. It's all right for you to like it—but the place has to like you, remember, or it's going to raise h—l with you. Did you ever see a prize pup trying to make up to a pack of mongrels? It's a lot of fun—if you don't happen to care for the prize pup."

"I'm taking that chance," she retorted. "Anyhow—I don't consider myself a prize pup. I have a good deal to live down, Gerald."

He patted her interlocked fingers. "I'm sorry you feel that way about it, darling," he said softly. "Guess I'm to blame."

Silver's free laugh rang out. "I should say you were not! If I do anything, it's because I want to, whether it's right or wrong!"

Gerald gave a low whistle. "There speaks Jim Grenoble!" he said soberly. "But I'll believe you, Silver. And I wish you luck. If it doesn't work out, I won't be far away. At least not for awhile. Do you want me to drive you up to the house? I'll promise not to set foot on one little bit of your sacred—"

"Gerald" Silver interrupted sharply. She thought quickly for a moment. "All right—drive me up."

Quite abruptly and mysteriously, her relationship with Gerald Lucas had changed—had changed so that it seemed it had never existed. Less than a month ago, his very presence would have thrown her into a panic of wild emotion. Was it her father's death that had made her a different person, or was it this uncompromising landscape, in which Gerald and his kind seemed a little absurd? Both, perhaps. But there was something else, too—something which she could not pull up to the light and analyze.

Gerald was turning the car in at the Willard gate. And there, between poplar trees that were defined vaguely against a moon that was like a rising red world, stood Corinne in her white dress.

Silver got out of the car. Gerald swung it about to leave immediately, but Corinne came toward it and stood for a moment in the glare of the lights. Silver looked at Corinne and then at Gerald. Suddenly, as she saw Gerald's eyes dwelling upon that white figure standing in the light, there came an instant's conviction, lucid and electrifying, that nothing would ever be the same again.

"This is Gerald Lucas," Silver said quickly, and hesitated.

Gerald smiled and put forth a hand. "And what's the other half of it?" he asked.

"I'm Corinne Willard," Corinne replied as she took Gerald's hand.

He gave her a little half-amused, searching look that Silver understood only too well.

"Corinne Willard?" Gerald repeated. "And where have you been all my life?"

"Where nice girls always are," Corinne replied archly. "Living at home with mother."

"Just a nice, old-fashioned girl," Gerald bantered amiably. "Well, come along out to Emerald bay some night when mother isn't around. Bring her out with you, Silver."

Silver stepped to the side of the car.

"Gerald," she said, "you're going to be late for your appointment. And besides—"

"Right-o, Silver!" Gerald put in immediately. "I was forgetting. See you both later."

The car shot into the road and vanished beyond the thicket where the highway turned to the south.

"Well—I must say—you have a way of dismissing people—" Corinne observed.

"I just happen to know Gerald," Silver said quietly.

"So I have heard," Corinne remarked. "He's not at all what I imagined him. And he is awfully good looking ,isn't he?"

Silver was thoughtful for a moment.

"Corinne," she said at last, "I don't want Gerald around here at all."

"Well, it's no affair of mine, my dear," Corinne said lazily, and began calling to her dog, who was exploring the underbrush on the hill.

Something deep within Silver trembled. She saw Corinne turn away and go toward the house. From among the shadows under the great oak came the sound of Jason playing a quaint old lullaby. The music, mingling with the unbroken churring of the frogs, seemed to come from far away, from a past of half-remembered, half-forgotten things.

CHAPTER VI

JUST before sundown, Silver rode out to bring the cattle in from the pasture. On the way home she paused beside a stripped field of barley where the men were at work. A couple of them waved to her. Roddy waved to her and Silver, waving back, remembered irrelevantly that Corinne had not been present at the midday meal. She had gone to luncheon at the Richters', in their cottage on Twin Deer lake.

Silver shook her bridle rein and was about to turn away when she heard a scream from the field. She swung around quickly and saw Roddy jump toward a tow-headed youth who was standing near him. The engine stopped instantly and the men hurried to where Roddy was leaning over the boy. Silver slipped down from her horse and in a moment had crept under the fence and was beside Roddy. The boy had stumbled and caught two fingers of one hand in a cog-wheel of the thresher. The fingers were two bloody tatters hanging from the hand. The boy was lying on the ground now, his face a deathlike pallor under the sunburn, his lips writhing back from his clenched teeth.

Roddy looked up. "Has anyone a clean handkerchief?"

Nobody responded. Silver had knelt beside Roddy, who was keeping a vise-like grip on the bleeding hand.

"Use this, Roddy," she said quickly, and whipped off her clean white linen blouse. With her shoulders bared to the rosy light of the low sun, she tore the material into strips and gave them to Roddy while he made a bandage and a tourniquet for the boy's mangled hand.

"All right, Jimmie!" Roddy said at last, and lifted the boy gently to his feet. "Start the truck, Jason. You'd better go down to Maynard and let Doc Woodward attend to it."

In a minute the truck had rattled away. It had all happened so quickly, it seemed to Silver that she had scarcely drawn a breath. Roddy was coming back to her from the wagon that stood off a short distance from the threshing machine. He was carrying his own grimy jacket. She permitted him to button it up to her breast, while she thrust her hands down into the pockets in an effort to control their trembling.

"That wasn't very pleasant, was it?" he said with a grim smile. "But those things happen now and then." When she did not reply, he laid his hand on her shoulder. "You were a brick, Silver—to do what you did. But you're pretty unstrung. Perhaps you'd better ride home in the wagon with me. Rusty will find his way back alone."

In another moment, she knew, she would burst into nervous tears. Without looking at him she said hurriedly, "No, thanks, Roddy. I'm—all right."

She turned away abruptly and rushed back to the fence, crawled under it and called to the horse, who had wandered off a short distance.

All the way home, beneath Silver's shuddering memory of the ragged clots of the boy's fingers, dwelt the thought of Roddy's dark face and his kindling changed eyes.

* * * * * * * *

While Roddy was washing in the tin basin on the bench outside the house—placed there for the use of the crew—Phronie came out of the kitchen.

"What's this I hear about the Healy boy?" she asked. "What happened?"

Roddy told her.

"Well, I declare it just seems something has to happen every year," Phronie said. "And he's such a nice boy, too. Well, hurry up and get washed. Supper is ready."

"Is Corinne home yet?" Roddy asked.

"She's upstairs changin' her clothes. Have you seen Silver anywhere? She went to fetch the cows, but I haven't seen her since."

Roddy told her then of the part Silver had played in getting the boy ready to go to Maynard with Jason.

"Well—that girl beats me!" Phronie declared. "But then—she's just like her mother. I remember—"

"You'd better go in and look after things, ma," Roddy interrupted.

Roddy hastened upstairs to put on clean clothing before he sat down to supper. On the landing he met Corinne. She was dressed in a clinging green chiffon gown that came almost to her beautifully shod feet.

"Hello, lovely!" he greeted her in a low voice.

She laughed and rumpled his hair. "There's a corn roast and a dance over at the lake tonight, darling," she told him. "I thought I might as well dress now. Aren't you going to kiss me?"

Roddy grinned, then drew her to him and kissed her throat.

"You've washed already?" she asked, surprised. "Don't tell me you washed in that tin basin outside."

"Certainly. Why not? I've done it for years."

"You have a bathroom upstairs, haven't you?"

"Listen, kid," he protested. "You don't know it, but the men are funny about such things. I don't want them to feel—well, you know what I mean."

"I don't know at all," she objected. "I should think—"

He swung her to him and held her close for a moment. "You're much too pretty to talk to me in that tone," he remonstrated. "Go on down—I'll be with you in a jiffy."

But as soon as he had left her, his mood grew sober again. He could not forget young Jim Healy and his poor crushed hand. Then, curiously, with no obscure lightening of his spirit, there came to him the vision of Silver Grenoble, in her riding breeches, kneeling there on the field in the sunset, her shoulders bare above the plain silk bodice. Perhaps he had been all wrong about her. Perhaps she belonged here as essentially as he did himself.

Roddy entered the dining room. Before he took his place at the table, he glanced over at Corinne.

TOWNSHIP PATRON TELLS OF RUSSIA

Mr. Ford said old persons and other low producers often were sent to Siberia and in this connection he pointed out that mortality among the middle-aged and elderly is unusually high in Russia.

BUYING POWER LOW.

As an indication of the extent to which Russian workers are ernment, the speaker declared that the average Russian workman's salary will buy goods not over 40 American dollars in value each month. "Russian rubles have small value to the worker who receives them but they cost the tourist in Russia a great deal more," he said.

"The Russian government is eager to lay its hands on foreign money which enables it to buy cheaply of other nations. In fact, I have available authentic information that much of the communist activity in this country is financed by American dollars sent from Russia to New York and disbursed by the Russian ambassador at Washington, D. C."

RAPS RED POLICIES.

In summing up his observations of Russian life, Mr. Ford declared the soviets' experiment as among the most interesting sciological developments of today and criticised the Stalin dictatorship for its interference in the affairs of other nations. He contrasted the drabness of Russian life with that in neighboring countries and pointed out that, owing to complete censorship, Russians have no opportunity to learn accurately of progress elsewhere in the world.

VISITS NORTHERN PORTS.

As a prelude to his Russian comments the speaker told of his trip through Iceland, seat of the world's oldest parliament and Spitzbergen, only 600 miles from the North Pole. He told also of his journey through the fjords of Norway, which, he said, resembled Yosemite scenery on a grand scale.

Of his human contacts during
